In a challenging economy, businesses need every advantage they can get.

Wally Olson believes training is the ultimate competitive edge for any business or nonprofit organization. He has launched Growth Point Consulting, based in Thurmont.

The business offers team building, staff development, executive coaching and business planning services.

"Companies and organizations rarely stand still, they're usually moving forwards or backwards," Olson said. " ... Growth Point can help businesses tackle their most urgent needs, whether it's setting goals and creating a business plan, team building, creating trust, or learning clear, authentic communications."

"This is the time of year when businesses and individuals generally look back on the past year, and think about what they should have done differently, missed opportunities or forgetting to celebrate the successes they did achieve," Olson said.

By taking the time to set clear, specific, measurable goals and a plan for achieving those goals, people and organizations can succeed, Olson said. His firm is a service-disabled veteran-owned small business.

Olson is a past president of the Rotary Club of Carroll Creek.
